Purpose: The SSRC conducts applied research on pressing public health and safety issues in the Gainesville community, and promotes action and advocacy about these issues through an empirical-based, collaborative approach that engages University of Florida students, faculty, administration, and other leaders and agencies in the community.

Activities: The SSRC provides multidisciplinary opportunities for all University of Florida students who seek to bridge research and action on important community issues. They routinely present research findings at local venues to guide policy development and prevention initiatives that address public health and safety issues.
